

Crafting a Personal History

A Guide Plus a Case Study:
Three Generations of the Hinds Family in New York's Adirondack Mountains

by Harold E. Hinds, Jr. Ph.D.

This study establishes the basic principles necessary to successfully research and document a personal family history. In most cases only a fragmentary record of an ancestor's life will have survived, and those traces will tend to cluster around only a few topics. So it is in the Hinds case study presented. Analysis of those traces is essential: so analysis is made transparent in the text. Other approaches are briefly presented in an appendix.

Harold E. Hinds, Jr. is Distinguished Research Professor of History at the University of Minnesota-Morris. He is the author of A Basic Guide to Genealogical and Family History Resources for Essex County, New York.
